

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Did Leonardo da Vinci Hide a Second Mona Lisa Inside His World-Famous Painting?

New Book Reveals 60 Hidden Images in Da Vinci's Art — Including a Side Profile of the Mona Lisa Herself

A groundbreaking discovery is captivating the art world: author Brandon Davis has found a hidden, side-profile portrait of the Mona Lisa — embedded within the background of the world's most famous painting. In his new book, SECRET DA VINCI, Davis reveals 60 hidden images across Leonardo da Vinci's paintings and drawings. But this one — a ghostlike silhouette, seated in profile — might be the most astonishing. It appears Leonardo left a second portrait of his enigmatic subject, veiled in plain sight. And above her, an unmistakable larger face emerges from the rocky background. "Leonardo was a visionary who encoded meaning beneath the surface of his art," says Davis. "The hidden profile figure, so closely resembling the Mona Lisa, is too precise to dismiss. It's as if he left behind a secret layer of the painting — waiting centuries to be seen." This remarkable discovery offers a fresh perspective for art lovers, historians, and fans of The Da Vinci Code — inviting a new look at centuries-old masterpieces through modern eyes. SECRET DA VINCI is available now at secretdavinci.com and on Amazon worldwide.

Detail from the Mona Lisa, showing what author Brandon Davis identifies as a hidden side-profile and larger ghostlike face.